

Overview:

The History A Level course is designed to cover a breadth of time. It allows students to study very different periods, from Early Stuart England to Twentieth Century Europe, and enables them to develop advanced skills in the interpretation and evaluation of historical argument. History demands consideration of historical ideas and beliefs and so helps students to understand important political, social, and economic issues in the Modern World. Students will be encouraged to learn to question the utility of historical evidence and to develop techniques in independent research. The course will allow them to further develop skills in writing essays and so enable them to write an extended piece of coursework. In class, through a variety of teaching methods, students will be encouraged to express their ideas and viewpoints and to debate issues and controversial topics of the historical time period in question. These skills are essential requirements for study in Further Education as well as pre-requisites for a variety of careers that demand an expertise in communication. An understanding and an interest in modern political debate is essential for students to flourish on this course. Finally and of equal importance, students will be prepared fully for their A Level examinations.

Expectations:

Students will be allocated core texts that will cover their A Level study but additional reading and research is also expected. Moreover, and so as to better consolidate classroom learning, students will be expected to add to class notes, building on arguments and developing more in depth knowledge of key historical events. Students can expect to engage in lively whole class discussions and should be prepared to have their world view challenged as well as challenging the viewpoints of others.

Extra-Curricular Activities/Independent Learning Opportunities:

In the past we have run a variety of trips abroad as well as a trips to the Houses of Parliament.

Career Pathways:

Many professions and courses in further Education regard History very favourably. It is viewed as a subject that is challenging as it demands academic rigour and it is a 'facilitating' subject: The skills of debate, the ability to express and consider differing opinions and arguments, and the ability to evaluate and assess information is crucial in Journalism and the Media, Law, Business, Human Resources, and Politics. Many careers demand the ability to express an opinion and to support an argument as well as to be able to communicate succinctly.

Good combinations of other subjects to study with History:

Religious Education, Sociology, Psychology, English
